

Google released a lighter version of Gmail in the Google Play Store

Google has released updates for YouTube, Assistant and Gboard for Android smartphones with less than 1GB of RAM. The latest updated application is Gmail, which has been released in Google Play Store

The good news for all Android users struggling whenever they have to check for email or messages that are blocked due to low-performance devices: Google is launching lighter, more resource-efficient applications.

So far, Google has released updates for YouTube, Assistant and Gboard for Android smartphones with less than 1GB of RAM. The latest updated application is Gmail, which has been released in Google Play Store

1. Download Gmail Go for Android

According to Google, the application updates "Gmail Go" both gently and quickly. Although this update application runs faster and uses less resources, Gmail Go may lack some features compared to the full version.

Gmail Go supports many Gmail accounts, 15GB of free memory, smarter anti-spam and inbox features, that's all Google has confirmed. Specifically:

1. Smarter inbox : Focus on messages sent from previous friends and family, emails from social networks, neatly classified ads, wait until you have time to watch.
2. Less spam : Your account is still safe and unobtrusive because Gmail Go blocks spam messages before they reach your inbox.

3. 15GB of free memory : With this capacity you don't have to delete incoming messages for more free space.
4. Support multiple accounts : Set up both Gmail and non-Gmail addresses (Outlook, Yahoo and other IMAP / POP emails).

In addition, it seems that Gmail Go has not yet been released to all countries, including Vietnam. Currently, it is not compatible with all Android devices, although the list of supported devices for this application may expand in the near future.
