

Google talks about new features coming soon for Inbox

In a question and answer session on social network Reddit, three members of the Google Inbox app development team said they are continuing to work to add new features to the email manager.

In a question and answer session on social network Reddit, three members of the Google Inbox app development team said they are continuing to work to add new features to the email manager.

They say one of the most requested things is the display of emails from multiple accounts into a single area. Inbox is also being recommended to support the Google Apps accounts of companies and organizations, not just the free Gmail account today. The group also shared that the upcoming web version of the Inbox will be compatible with more browsers, including IE, Firefox and Safari (currently only available with Chrome).

Not only that, Inbox is about to have the ability to integrate with Google Drive, a separate version of the tablet app, which allows you to download all attachments at the same time, coordinating activities with Google

Calendar is also better.

Jason Cornwell, Inbox's interactive designer, revealed that "eventually there will be a long list of Gmail features brought to Inbox", and "we really want to balance building features. with the development of new functions to improve the idea of ??Inbox products ". All of these things are being actively developed by Google, but unfortunately there is no time point mentioned.

You finished reading the article "Google talks about new features coming soon for Inbox" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.