

Google will completely change how to sell Android smartphones

For months now, gossip has been rumored that Google is developing a brand new brand for mobile devices called Android Silver.

For months now, gossip has been rumored that Google is developing a brand new brand for mobile devices called Android Silver.

However, according to the latest information from TKTechNews , Motorola will be the first company to launch Android Silver smartphone to the market. In theory, Google will build Android Silver as a premium and unified platform like iOS, to help Android smartphones compete better with iPhone.

With Android Silver , Google will spend money on some partners to develop smartphones for this platform. Each phone model will install an almost original version of Android and users will have 24/7 access to its technical support through Google Hangouts. Google will also be able to add Android Silver kiosks in network stores to inform users about the program.

At the same time, rumors also said that Google and Motorola will be able to shake hands to develop an international line of smartphones called Shamu. Although the previous articles called Shamu were Nexus 6, the latest rumors confirmed, Shamu will install Android Silver and be named Moto S.

Moto S's speculative configuration includes a massive 5.9-inch screen with QHD resolution ( 1440 x 2560p ), Phone Arena said.

Google has not yet released any notifications regarding Android Silver, but both Android Police and The Information are reliable sources about Google before. Last year, the giant sought to unveil the Nexus 5 announcement at the end of October so it is possible that the Moto S and Android Silver will also be released at that time this year.

You finished reading the article "Google will completely change how to sell Android smartphones" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

---