

Guide to finding map pieces in Elden Ring

The map in Elden Ring is a fairly new element to FromSoftware's role-playing games, although in most other games the map is a very common thing. However, the map in Elden Ring is unlike most open world game maps and has very little effect on directing the player to the fish.

In fact, the map in this game is almost completely empty, unless the gamer collects map fragments.

Map pieces in the Elden Ring are essential collectibles and should be the first thing every player should look for when exploring a new area. Map shards are scattered throughout the Lands Between but are easy to find as they always appear on the same ruins that are surprisingly easy to find.

The map fragment is essential for the complete map to appear

Pieces of the map reveal the Elden Ring world map, but only a small piece of land. It would be accurate to compare this feature to The Legend of Zelda: Breath of the Wild's Sheikah Tower system, as they both show all areas when explored.

Map pieces are linked to a subregion of the larger area, and collecting them all for one area can help with easier navigation and orientation.

Map pieces are automatically added to the player's world map when selected, but they only outline the basic terrain, road, and environmental features of the area.

The game allows players to use map markers for a reason: they're the only way to highlight points of interest, helping to get back to hidden bosses, NPCs, or crafting resources. much easier to create.

How to find map pieces in Elden Ring

To find map pieces in Elden Ring, first take a closer look at your empty map. Although it doesn't show any content and doesn't have much to see, if you look along the faint outline of the roads, gamers will see markers like turrets. These icons show where the Beacon can be found.

Map pieces for a certain area can be found at the base of these icons, which are tall monuments jutting out from the side of the road.

When the map screen is open, place a Beacon on these points with the A (or X) button to mark their position in the world with a beam of light, this will help the player see it where it is. surprisingly long distances.

Some of these Beacons are surrounded by enemies, such as the first map piece of the Gatefront Ruins Site of Lost Grace, which will be among a small army of Godrick warriors.

You finished reading the article "Guide to finding map pieces in Elden Ring" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

