

Hacker attacks CIA: 'Will continue to act until caught'

Lulz Security's emerging hacking group challenges 'Catch us if possible' and insists on knocking down as many websites as we did with Sony, the US Senate, CIA ... until it was retired.

Lulz Security's emerging group of hackers challenged "Let's catch us if we can" and insisted on knocking down as many websites as we did with Sony, the US Senate, and the CIA . until we were sacked.

This statement is considered arrogant, but it is also a warning to website owners in preventing Internet risks. "You can get expensive, advanced tools . but if you do not regularly update data and increase protection, you will become the latest victim of LulzSec ", David Gorodyansky, CEO of security firm AnchorFree, said.

Lulz Security (LulzSec) claims to hold 62,000 e-mails and passwords of Gmail, Facebook, PayPal, WoW accounts that they collect from various sources. Last week, the group publicly published more than 26,000 sensitive e-mail addresses, used by users to subscribe to a pornographic site. Facebook had to automatically close all social media accounts associated with these e-mails after receiving complaints. For example, a member was hacked by a hacker and impersonated her to say goodbye to a boyfriend.

On Twitter, LulzSec claimed to be "the leader in bringing high quality entertainment".

LulzSec began to be famous after repeatedly attacking Sony's system because Japanese electronics company brought George Hotz to court. They also paralyzed the CIA website for a few hours, posting it on the PBS media site, knocking down the US Senate site . Not only that, but the group was supposed to attack orders. phone even though they claim not to distribute malicious code, only to entertain or alert administrators about vulnerabilities in the system.

LulzSec declared unrelated or confronted with other notorious hacker group, Anonymous. The cyber security community also found that Anonymous had clear criteria and attacked with political motives, while LulzSec made it as random as "children are teasing people" according to Gorodyansky.

The name of this group of hackers also shows that. Security means " security " and Lulz is a variation of LOL (laughs), showing that their attacks are only for entertainment and pleasure.
