

Hacker took control of the London Police Department website, posting 'unacceptable' content.

The Metropolitan Police website has been hijacked for hours, causing almost all London Police Department online activities to be completely paralyzed.

A serious but equally interesting incident has just happened in the UK when the official website of the Metropolitan Police Department was suddenly visited by hackers and left uneasy.

Accordingly, the Metropolitan Police website has been hijacked for hours, causing almost all London Police Department online activities to be completely paralyzed. Not only that, the attackers also posted a series of strange messages in the bulletin board and posted on the Metropolitan Police social media accounts, in which there was a special line of content: 'FUCK THE POLICE'.

1. The most dangerous hackers on the planet: Anonymous, Equation Group, Department 121 . What do you know about them?

Messages of insulting police

These 'offensive' messages were posted by attackers around 22:30, July 19, local time. Currently the Metropolitan Police security team has regained the rights control your website, and confirm that this serious violation is conducted through third party software.

'On the night of Friday, July 19, a series of illegal and offensive messages appeared in the news section of our website, as well as on Twitter @metpoliceuk and Twitter accounts. in emails sent to subscribers. Currently the Metropolitan Police security team is rushing to complete the investigation process and gather relevant information to determine exactly what happened. We have now begun making changes to our access arrangements to MyNewsDesk, 'a London Police Department spokesman said in a press conference.

1. 32 million dollars 'evaporated' in the hack of Bitpoint electronic money trading floor

Many people have captured the content of hackers posting

In fact, the London Police Department's communications team does not directly operate (technically) the Metropolitan Police website, but instead hires an online website administration service provider named MyNewsDesk provides technical support as well as manages some other content posted on this website. 'When a news or message is published via MyNewsDesk, it will appear on the London Police Department website and their Twitter account, and create an email containing the message / news for those who have posted it. Signed for online news updates, 'the police agency representative explained.

1. Bulgaria: Getting urgent IT experts for revealing vulnerabilities in software

You finished reading the article "Hacker took control of the London Police Department website, posting 'unacceptable' content." edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
