Types of healing items in PUBG

1. Bandage

This is a basic healing item and easy to find in the map and always follow the 5 pack. Each Bandage package will give you 10 blood for 1 use, but no more than 75% for recovery. You can take 4 seconds of bandages to heal with emergencies.

However, there are not too many gamers who choose this healing item. But if you just play it, it's best to keep yourself a few packages in your backpack.

Heal

Bandages heal a character's health by 10 overtime. Performing certain actions while casting this item will cancel it. It cannot heal character's health over 75.

2. First Aid Kit

This healing item is also very easy to find in the map and can heal instantly. Accordingly when using, the maximum milestone will be 75%, no matter how much blood you have left. As such, we will not be able to use another First Aid.

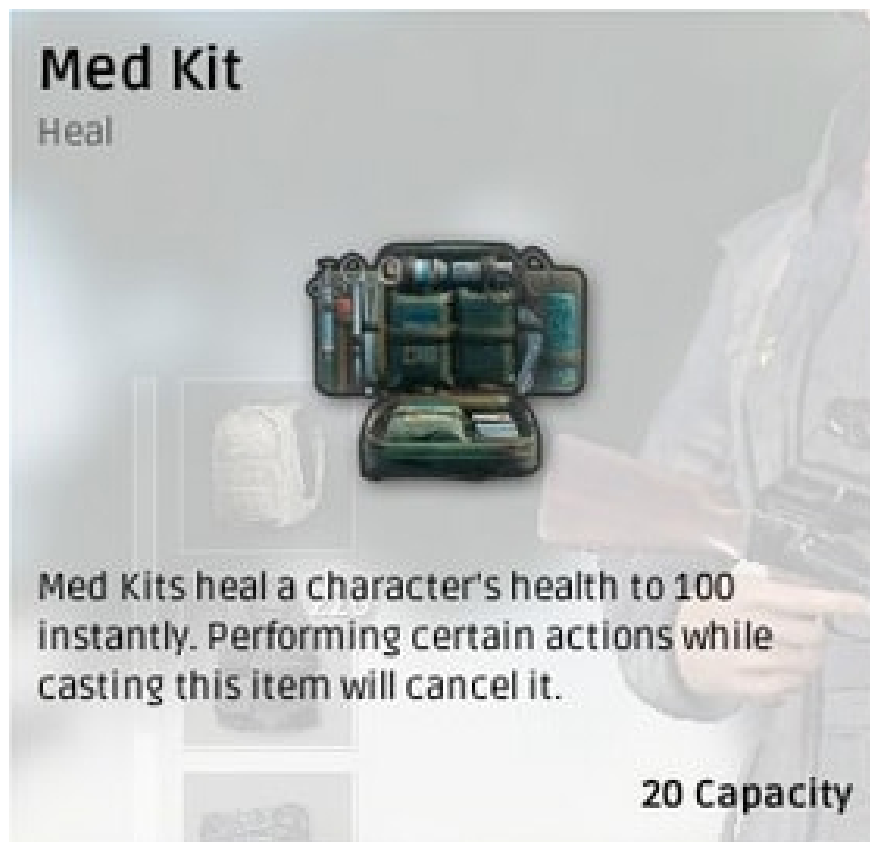

Many gamers choose to heal because the healing speed is relatively fast, the duration of use is only about 7 seconds faster than using Bandage.

Players can use this item type in many different situations, just pay attention to the time used is okay. However, if you are near the end of the boilers, you should not use them when you save your teammates. Since this time your blood loss rate will be very fast, we need more than 7 seconds to heal from the item. At these times, it is advisable to switch to the Bandage healing item.

3. Med Kit

This type of item will be harder to obtain than the other two because its effect is much greater. No matter what level your blood level is, this item will recover 100%. But the time to use the Med Kit will be 10 seconds relatively long, and the player may be in danger for 10 seconds. First find a safe location to hide and then use the Med Kit.

Understanding each item as well as using PUBG in battle will help gamers to choose which item to use accordingly. For example, instead of an emergency using Med Kit heal, you should immediately consider using the First Aid Kit.
