Surely one of us also thinks that public toilets are one of the most boring places, right? However, the design and architectural studio Gyva Grafika in Lithuania cleverly changed this concept.

The old restaurant Galeria Urbana in Lithuania, Lithuania wants to upgrade and remodel its old toilet but does not allow the removal of any bricks.

This challenging mission was given to Gyva Grafika, a local architectural studio. After discussion, this group of architects came up with an extremely simple and effective way to make everyone surprised.

They captured many windows in the Kausas neighborhood, where many familiar diners of Galeria Urbana restaurant grew up. Then, print the number of photos taken into a sticker and paste it on each brick. This is probably an extremely new and meaningful visual experience with a public toilet.

"Lithuania is a country that often ignores public spaces. Many people live in very clean apartments but when they leave the house, the situation changes completely. Stairs, public yards and public spaces "We have a lot of things to do with it. Unusual is not taken care of. So we decided to balance these spaces, put the outside stuff inside and vice versa," Gyva Grafika representative told Bored Panda.

After the project received a lot of positive feedback, Gyva Grafika produced and traded this nostalgic and narcissistic tiles. Let's TipsMake.com admire the simple but interesting toilet repair project of Gyva Grafika in this article!
