

How do astronauts wash their hair in space?

The video below will show you the washing of astronauts in outer space with lots of interesting things.

Have you ever wondered how the lives of astronauts on the universe from shampooing, bathing, toileting? The fact that life in space is different from Earth or what we often see in sci-fi films.

1. What happens if you shoot in space?
2. Can astronauts go to catch Pokemon?

The video below will show you the washing of astronauts in outer space with lots of interesting things.

The video recorded the washing process of Expedition 36 astronaut Karen Nyberg on the ISS International Station.

Whether your hair is short or long, in the weightless world, they stand up. And of course the astronauts can't flush the water like they do on Earth, they have to apply shampoo on a towel and swipe along the hair to clean it. Even astronauts can't let their newly-washed hair out of a towel, because suspended hair can stab the eye or be inhaled by astronauts.

You finished reading the article "How do astronauts wash their hair in space?" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.