

How to check if a Snapchat account is leaked?

If you are wondering if your Snapchat account has been leaked (in the leaked 4.6 million Snapchat account list), you can do it the following way to check.

If you are wondering if your Snapchat account has been leaked (in the leaked 4.6 million Snapchat account list), you can do it the following way to check.

Deliver the GS Lookup site's work interface - Snapchat
According to CNET, users can now use the service at the website address: lookup.gibsonsec.org.

After accessing this website, users just need to enter the Snapchat account name in the Username box and then click on the option. If the website responds to the correct phone number, then your account is currently leaked.

Otherwise, the website will respond that your Snapchat account is still safe.

Reportedly, hackers are giving about 4.6 million Snapchat accounts of users. In it, the data initially hid the last two phone numbers of users to "minimize the spread of spam" but hackers warned that it could launch all data "not covered".

You finished reading the article "How to check if a Snapchat account is leaked?" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

