

How to Create a Screencast.com Account

To officially share your screencasts and screenshots on the web, you'll need to set up a Screencast.com account. If you don't have one, you can set up an account quickly, from right within the program. This article will teach you how. Open...

Method 1 of 2:

Via Jing

Open Jing from your Start menu, if it isn't already started by default.

2.

Click the Jing sun from the top of the screen.

3.

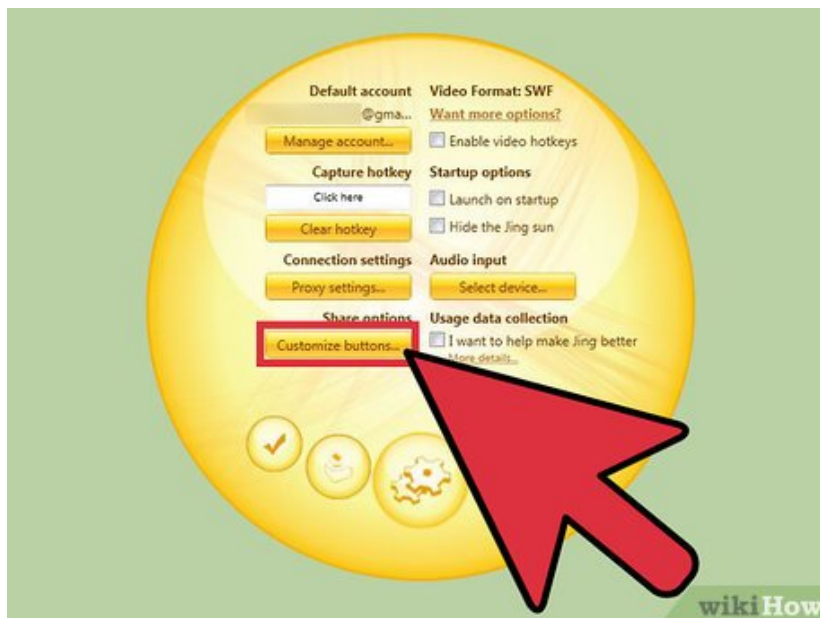

Click the "More" button. The "More" option should be the option to the far right arm of the dialog box at the very top center portion of the screen. This should automatically launch another big dialog box.

4.

Click the Preferences option button, from Jing's splash screen/options menu.

5.

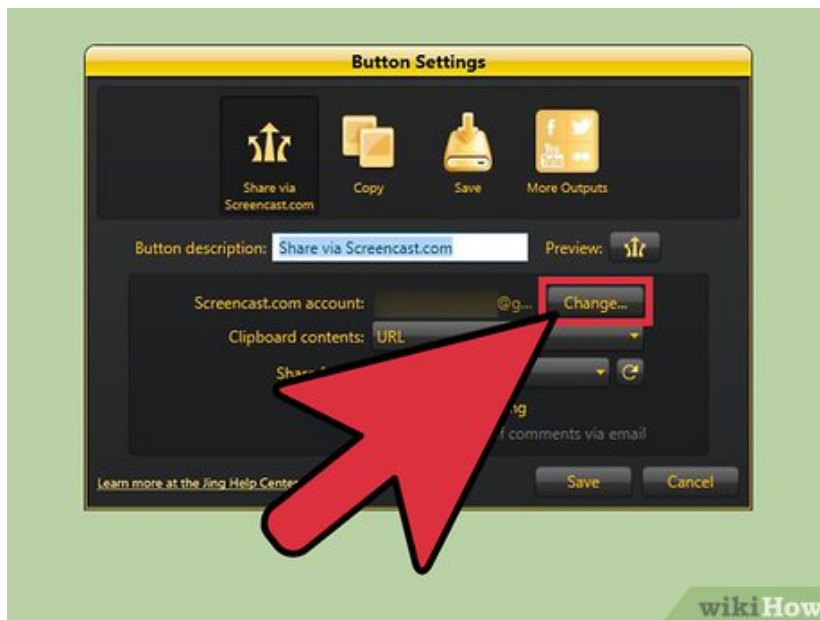

Click the "Customize buttons..." button that should be directly underneath the "Share options" portion of this dialog box.

6.

Click the button that contains three upwards pointing arrows that looks like a king's crown.

7.

Click the Change or Create (depending on your position with the company) button that is located in the section labelled "Screencast.com account". It should open with the cursor directly pointing on the option to create an account. If it doesn't you'll need to select the "Create new account" and click the top box.

Method 2 of 2:

Via the Screencast.com Webpage

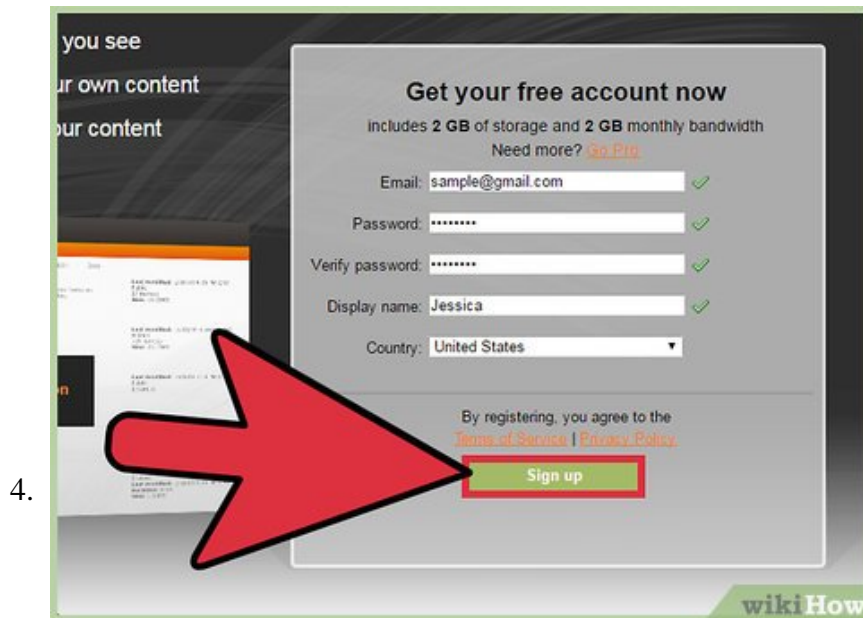

Visit the Screencast/TechSmith webpage in your web browser.

Look for the box on the page at about the center of the page that is primarily labeled "Get your free account now" and has 5 things you'll need to fill in including your email address, a password (and a repeat of it) and your display name and country of usage.

Fill in these boxes with the properly-formatted information.

Click the sign-up box at the bottom of this box to sign up.
