

How to exit the quick underground application on iPhone X

Turning off applications running in the background on iPhone X requires a lot of steps. However, we can shorten the operation to turn off the application running in the background on iPhone X.

iPhone X has changed the device interface compared to previous iPhone generations, making users more embarrassed. To turn off the application running in the background on the iPhone X in the normal way, users will have to swipe from the bottom edge of the screen and stop to access the interface of iPhone X.

Then you continue to swipe to find the application you want to turn off and hold on to the application until a red X appears in the upper left corner. However, users can shorten the operation to turn off the iPhone X underground application according to the following guide.

3. How to set Face ID on iPhone X

1. Turn off the underground application in use

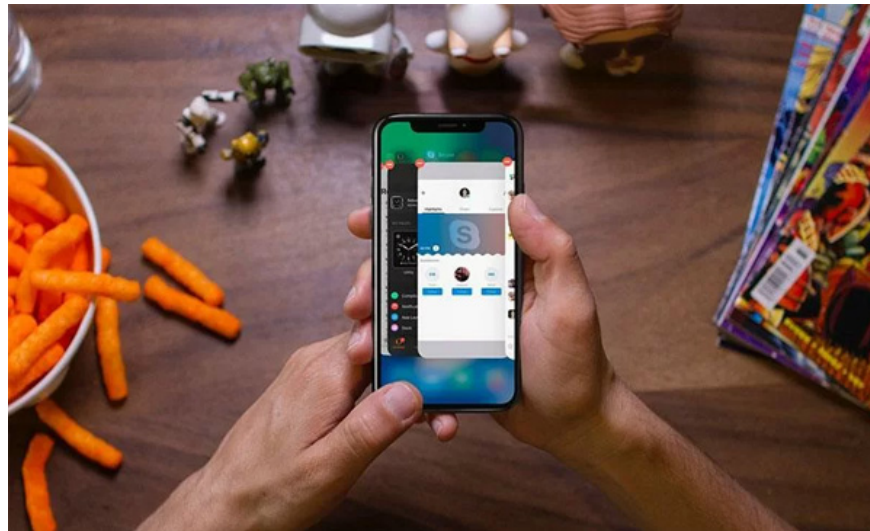

Step 1:

Swipe from the bottom edge of the iPhone X screen and stop to display multitasking.

Step 2:

When activating multitasking, release your hand to hold down an application tab when a red X appears on the tabs. Do not drop your hands, then swipe the application tab to exit the application running in the background.

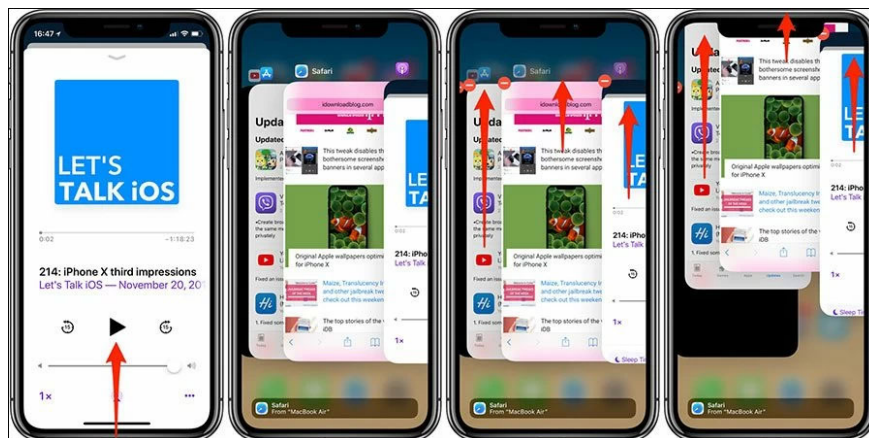

2. Exit multiple applications that run in the background for a while

Step 1:

Swipe from the bottom of the screen up and stop to display the multitasking process. Hold down the first application tab that you want to exit in the background when an X appears in the left corner of all application tabs.

Step 3:

Still holding your finger, hold 2 more fingers on any nearby card that you want to exit, then swipe up at the same time. So you can exit at least 3 applications at the same time.

Just like a small operation, users can exit many applications running in the background on iPhone X. This will help you do faster, compared to manual methods.
