High Dynamic Range (HDR) is a video format with an expanded contrast range that makes video quality better, colors more accurate and vivid than non-HDR (Standard Dynamic Range - SDR) videos.

HDR videos have been around for a long time, but they only became popular and were supported by many devices when popular 4K TVs and Blu-ray 4K UHDs. But not a video recorded in 4K resolution, it is HDR video. So the quality and free videos HDR appear quite little on YouTube.

So how to find HDR content on YouTube?

To search for free HDR content on YouTube, the best way is to search for keywords and include the terms "HDR", "4K HDR", "4K", or "UHD".

But not all videos with HDR video recording titles are HDR. To check if a video is HDR, it is best to use an HDR-enabled device to open the video, in the "quality" options section. In the list of resolution formats and number of frames per second (FPS), if there is HDR, the video is HDR.
