1. What is Activation Lock?

When activating your iPhone for the first time, Apple takes note of the device's unique identifier and your Apple ID. It then associates the iPhone's unique identifier with that Apple ID. This is to prevent any other Apple ID from using the device.

Without a username and password for the Apple ID, someone else cannot reset and use the iPhone. You may not notice the presence of Activation Lock until you reset or install the iOS upgrade. You must then sign in with your Apple ID to verify your identity and icloud activation unlock the device.

This security feature is closely linked to Find My iPhone, helping you identify a lost device. If you turn on Find My iPhone on your device, you also turn on Activation Lock. By default, both of these features are enabled on all iPhones.

If you want to determine if Find My iPhone (and Activation Lock) is enabled, go to Settings> [Your Name]> iCloud> Find My iPhone or sign in to icloud.com/find to see your device's current location.

Although people often have issues with Activation Lock on used iPhone phones, this feature is also available on iPad and Apple Watch. Just like on the iPhone, Activation Lock locks the iPad or Apple Watch to the Apple ID used for the setup.

2. Why is your ios device locked iCloud activation?

There are several common scenarios that can lead to iCloud activation lock, below is a list of causes:

1. You bought a used iPhone with iCloud activation locked.
2. If you forget your Apple ID account or password, or someone changes your Apple ID without your knowledge, you won't be able to unlock iCloud activation.
3. If you factory reset your device without first signing out of iCloud, your device might still be protected with Activation Lock. Once you set up your device, you still have to enter your Apple ID to activate it.
4. Hackers attack your Apple ID. If your Apple ID is hacked without your knowledge.
5. Find My Phone is enabled with an unknown Apple ID signed in.

3. What to do when your ios device is locked to iCloud activation?

If you don't unlock iCloud activation on your ios device, that device cannot be used. Here are the things you need to do when locked out of iCloud activation

3.1. Apple ID password recovery.

If you forgot your Apple ID account or password, or someone changed your Apple ID without your knowledge, please restore your Apple ID password. To re-enable your ios device, just log in Apple ID with its email and password.

If you use two-factor authentication, you'll need to tap Unlock with Passcode and then type in the one-time passcode Apple sent.

If you don't know the Apple ID email address, you can look it up on Apple's iForgot site (follow the link below).

<https://iforgot.apple.com/appleid#!§ion=appleid>

If you are unsure of the password or want to reset, you can also visit that page.

In addition to activating your device, you'll also need Apple credentials to set up the App Store, FaceTime calls, and iMessage.

If you can't reset your Apple ID password or recover an email address, call Apple support.

3.2. Ask Apple to remove Activation Lock

If you still can't activate your iPhone, ask Apple to remove Activation Lock from the device for which you have a valid proof of purchase. You can do this in two ways:

1. Make an appointment at Apple Store, bring your phone, purchase documents there.
2. Call Apple support and explain the situation. Ask the agent to remotely delete the Activation Lock for you.

3.3. Ask the seller to remotely disable Activation Lock

If you purchased an ios device with an iCloud activation lockout, ask the seller to remotely delete their account.

To remotely erase the device, the seller needs:

1. Step 1. Sign in with their Apple ID at icloud.com/find.
2. Step 2. Click on All Devices, then select the relevant iPhone.
3. Step 3. If you see Remove from Account, select it.
4. Step 4. If not, click on Erase iPhone, then select Remove from Account.
