

How to read newspapers on Chrome with Hewizo

The Hewizo utility will turn the articles into reading voices, including Vietnamese.

There are already a number of sites that incorporate a content reader, but not all of them have this feature. If you want to listen to the newspaper and do other things without being affected, you can install the Hewizo utility on Chrome browser. Accordingly this utility will convert all the articles on the website into a readable format for users to follow more easily, even if they do not open the website. All reading speed and voice are set and adjusted by you to suit your needs.

Especially, Hewizo utility supports 30 different languages, including Vietnamese with male and female voices. The readings on Hewizo are saved, whether they have been read or not so we can search again when needed. The following article will guide you how to use Hewizo to read newspapers on Chrome.

The screenshot shows the same mobile interface as above, but the first paragraph of text is highlighted in yellow. In the bottom navigation bar, the play button is now highlighted with a yellow circle.

There is also another way to read the article, we open the utility to switch to the Discovery interface. Here you just need to paste the article URL and press Enter to switch to the newspaper reading interface.

Step 7:

If, during the listening process, the listening process is not completed, click on In Progress or Saved to find the song you are currently listening to.

The articles read in on Hewizo are saved in the Archived Articles section. Click on More to open Archived Articles interface.

The interface to save the read post will include the article title, web page and article avatar according to the original article on the website.

Thus, with the Hewizo utility, reading the article content on the website is very simple and easy, even though the website does not have a content reader. All the settings for speech or content reading speed are chosen by you regardless of the factors.
