Google will send a confirmation code to the email you used as your recovery mail. Click on Send to send mail.

Your recovery email will receive a message from Google where they will give you a recovery code. Copy this recovery code and fill it into the recovery code box.

After filling in the correct recovery code that Google sent, you can see the account name you want to find again.

Next, find the password for your Gmail account. When you click on Forgot password, Google can direct you to various password recovery methods.

For those of you who have a habit of changing your password to increase security but then suddenly forget what your current password is, you can use the previous password to log in to your Gmail account.

But if you don't remember any other passwords or have never changed your password, you can click Try another way to change your Gmail account recovery method.
