One way to prevent others from knowing about your activity on Facebook is to reduce your interactions with your friends.

One way to prevent others from knowing your activity on Facebook is to reduce your friend list, a useful feature for users. When you add someone to your restricted list, they cannot see your posts, and your Facebook profile will not appear on their News Feed. This means you don't need to unfriend or even block friends on Facebook . Below is a guide on how to reduce your friend list on Facebook.

What is the feature to reduce engagement on Facebook?

Facebook's engagement reduction feature will decrease your and the other person's visibility on the News Feed. Neither of you will see the content you've posted.

Facebook not only limits how often their posts appear in your News Feed, but also removes their past posts from your News Feed.

People who are put into reduced engagement mode on Facebook will not receive any notification and will still be friends with each other, able to view each other's profiles or posts by directly accessing each other's timelines.

Step 2:

This interface allows us to search for people whose engagement has decreased . You enter their name into this interface to continue making adjustments.

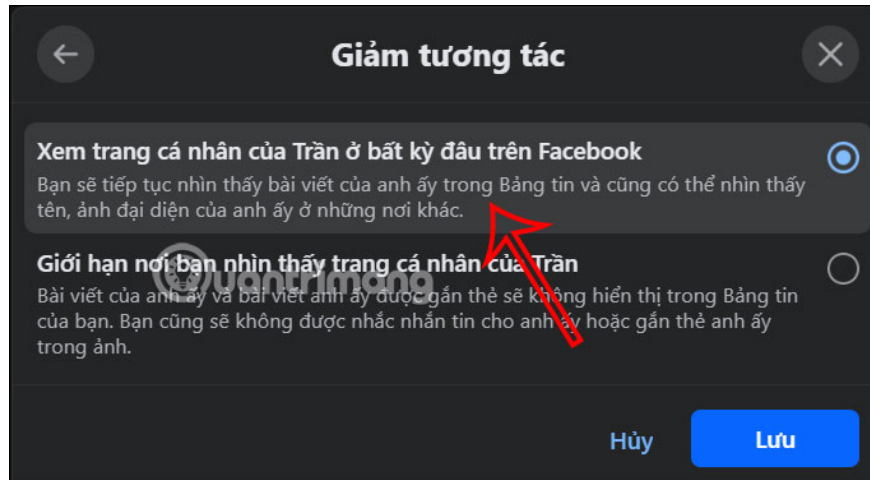

Step 3:

Users will then see the settings you've made to reduce interaction on Facebook for this account.

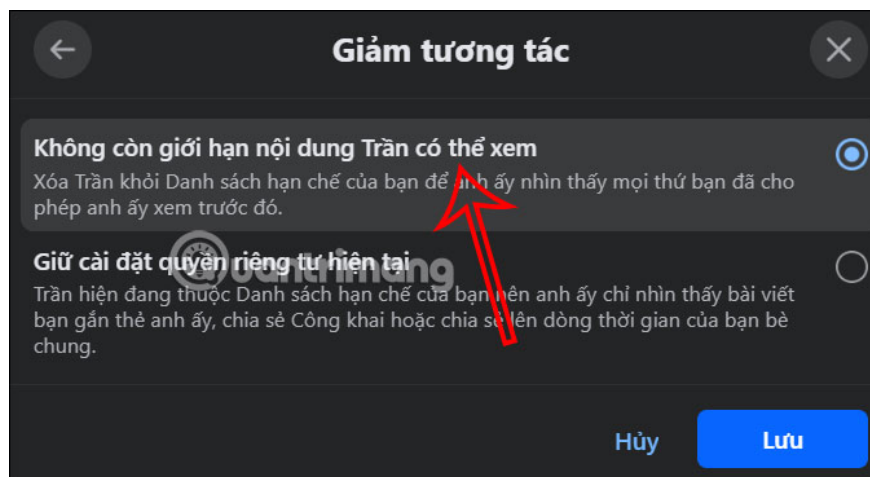

Step 4:

We will click the Edit button under "You have chosen to hide content from X" to reset it. At this point, the user needs to change it to "View X's profile anywhere on Facebook", then click Save to save the changes.

Continue by clicking Edit under Limit what X's profile will see. Then select No more limits on what X can see and click Save.

Continue by clicking on Edit who can see old posts, then select Keep all posts and click Save.

This means that the frequency of visibility of the other party's account and posts is no longer reduced as before, and both sides can see the posted content as usual.
