

How to turn off autoplay videos on Google Play Store

If you ask me what is most annoying on the Google Play app store, it must be autoplay advertising videos that consume a lot of useless data and system resources.

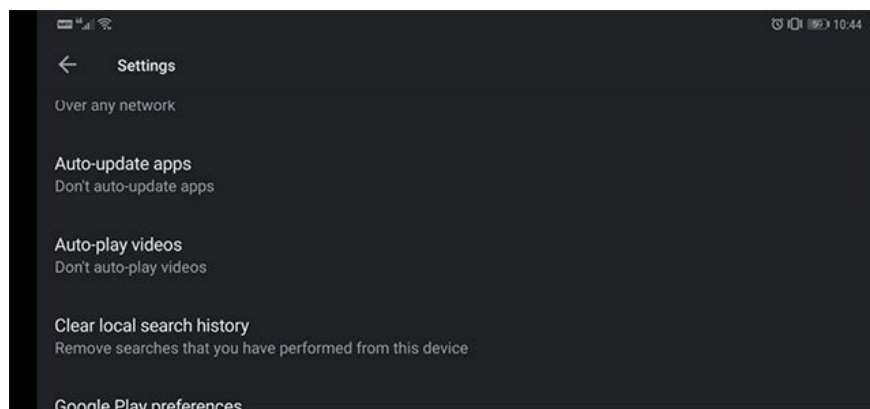

If you ask me what is most annoying on the Google Play app store, it must be autoplay advertising videos that consume a lot of useless data and system resources. Google introduced this feature on the Play Store a few months ago, and thank goodness! They have finally added a feature that allows users to turn off these annoying autoplay videos.

You can find autoplay promotional videos in the Game Spotlight section, as well as in Games You Might Like (recommended games you can like) and Suggested For You sections (recommended). for you). If your Google Play Store app is in version 17.9.17, you can turn off this annoying autoplay feature.

The steps are extremely simple. First, simply click the menu icon (3 dashes) in the upper right corner of the screen (next to the search box), then navigate to the items: settings (settings)> general (general)> auto -play videos (automatically play videos).

In the auto-play section, google will give you 3 options:

1. Automatically play videos at all times (data charges may apply)
2. Only automatically play videos over Wi-Fi
3. Do not automatically play video

If you find this auto-play feature completely useless, select 'Don't auto-play videos', or if you want to save mobile data (paid data) select ' Autoplay video only over Wi-Fi '.

The addition of the auto-play feature to advertise videos on the Google Play Store has received a lot of mixed reviews, saying that this is only a 'useless' feature, which can make users in areas where spend. Expensive mobile data charges get in trouble. The move to add the ability to turn off autoplay videos on the Play Store is small, but shows a sense of listening to Google users.
