WhatsApp is calling people to update the application immediately, after hackers take advantage of this tool to install sophisticated spyware on users' phones and gain access to the data warehouse.

Security vulnerabilities have been fixed in updated versions of WhatsApp recently, but some users will need to manually update the application to be protected.

It is not known how many percent of WhatsApp's 1.5 billion users have been targeted by hackers. Hackers have installed monitoring technology - developed by Israel's NSO Group - by communicating with the target via WhatsApp's call function.

"WhatsApp encourages people to upgrade to the latest version of the application, as well as updating the mobile operating system, to protect themselves against exploits attacks, targeting potential targets to obtain. Information stored on mobile devices, "Facebook, which owns WhatsApp, said.
