Why should Messenger be used?

Can Messenger be available without Facebook? The answer is yes. But should I do that?

Facebook Messenger is currently one of the largest messaging platforms worldwide. Facebook Messenger's main competitor is WhatsApp, another service owned and operated by Facebook. The main motivation for using Messenger is that most of your friends are also using this application.

But Messenger is not only a tool to chat with friends, but also a powerful multi-purpose application.

You can use Messenger video calls on your phone, Facebook video calls on your computer, voice calls, send GIFs, stickers and photos or play games with friends. In fact, about 8 billion messages are sent between users and businesses every month on Messenger.

And of course, as with WhatsApp, Messenger works on operating systems. You can stay in touch with your friends using Android, even when using iPhone.

All your messages are also encrypted. This means that whatever information you submit cannot be blocked by third parties. No one can see your message while transmitting information between devices.

Why should avoid Facebook?

Facebook is still a 'giant' in the field of social networking, but the popularity of this app is waning. The reason is that some users are switching to other communication devices like Snapchat (especially the younger generation), SMS or talking directly.

Some people refuse to use Facebook because they do not like political debates and nonsensical status updates every day.

Some people have trouble with Facebook's privacy and security scandals in recent years. Keep an eye out for privacy controls on Facebook if you use this service.

But even if you don't use Facebook anymore, Facebook can still track you with detailed profiles of people who don't use the application. Signing up for Messenger will not make much difference. Facebook and Messenger can be considered as two different entities.

First, you need to know how to install Messenger. Very simple. Just visit the App Store or Google Play, depending on the smartphone or tablet you are using. Make sure that it is an official application, created by Facebook Inc., otherwise you risk installing the wrong software.

Next, you need to know how to sign up for Messenger. When you open the app for the first time, Messenger will encourage you to log in to your Facebook account using your email address or phone number. Instead, click Create New Account below to make sure that the app won't create a Facebook profile.

You are prompted to enter a phone number and then receive a confirmation code message. After confirming this code, you need to enter your name so people can find you on the app. Once completed, you are ready to use Messenger.

Some users should also consider using Messenger Lite. Messenger Lite is designed to save battery power by limiting the number of features available. Messenger Lite is ideal for anyone with an old Android device or who often has trouble connecting.

Set up Messenger without a Facebook account

After activating the account, there are still a few settings that need to be completed to make the most of the Facebook Messenger application.

You may want to add photos so other users can recognize you. Next, the application will ask if you want to add contacts to Messenger. If granted with these permissions, Messenger will constantly access your contacts and automatically add new contacts to Messenger.

If you choose not to automate this process, you can still add each contact to your Messenger account, by searching for that person's phone number (if they have a phone linked to Messenger) or enter their name. they enter the 'To' field. You may have to search through some profiles before you see the person searching.

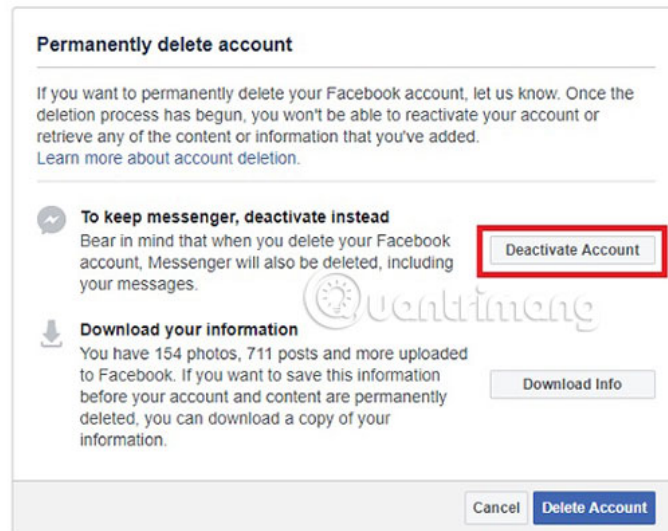

What happens if you delete or deactivate Facebook?

You may already have a Facebook account, but want to delete Facebook while keeping Messenger. Don't make this decision in a hurry. Before starting the process, you need to know the meaning of deactivating or disabling your Facebook account.

In short, disabling Facebook still allows you to think about whether you want to permanently delete your Facebook account (because the data is still stored, ready to reactivate).

When you disable Facebook, you will also be asked if you want to continue using Messenger.

However, if you delete Facebook, your previous messages will be set to 'Facebook User' and no one will be able to respond.

Disabling means that the message will remain with the contacts. Deleting means that all messages will be lost and unrecoverable on the device (but still on the recipient's device) and you will need to create a new Messenger account using the above method.

How to use Facebook Messenger

If you want to use Messenger without a Facebook account, just download the application and click Create New Account . Add a phone number and give the application access to the contacts. Once you've added the contacts, just click someone's name and start a conversation. Very easy, right?
