The Mini 110 is similar in style to the Mini 1000 with Atom processor and 10.1-inch screen. However, instead of using a 1.8-inch small hard drive, it comes equipped with a 2.5-inch laptop standard hard drive, which supports data transfer at higher speeds.

The screen of the device supports a resolution of up to 1,366 x 768 pixels, allowing viewing high-resolution content. To support the ability to handle high-definition video formats on Atom chips, the Mini 110 supports the Broadcom Crystal HD Enhanced Video option - this is the first netbook to use this feature.

To keep files on your computer and e-mail updated from your desktop or laptop to your netbook, Mini 110 allows online sync and copying via Syncables program. It supports two cheaper Windows XP or Linux operating system options. The black model will be available in Asia on May 28, other colors will arrive on June 30.

Along with the Mini 110, the company also introduced Pavilion dv2 in Asia, the first model to use AMD's Neo platform with dual-core AMD Athlon Neo X2 processor or Turion Neo X2. Pavilion dv2 is considered another option for users who like small, portable devices but don't choose a slow netbook.

Besides laptops, HP also introduced the new all-in-one, Pavilion MS200, exclusively for the Chinese market. It costs $ 599 (about 10.7 million). It uses AMD Athlon 64 X2 processor chip, 4 GB RAM, integrated DVD reader, Wi-Fi connection and will be available next July.
