

HP launched the 2012 Pavilion Pavilion laptop series

Both Pavilion Dv series, m6 and G series feature the latest Intel Core i or AMD processor chips. The Pavilion m6 model also has an Nvidia card option.

Both Pavilion Dv series, m6 and G series feature the latest Intel Core i or AMD processor chips. The Pavilion m6 model also has an Nvidia card option.

Along with ultrabook models today, HP has also refreshed a range of its products from the Pavilion entertainment line. Accordingly, the Pavilion DV series is completely redesigned with more modern features while the Pavilion G series will join the good price with 14 to 17 inch sizes. In addition, there is also the Pavilion M6 series, a thin but not ultrabook laptop with a good price. HP also refreshes its products with the latest processor options from Intel and AMD as well as graphics processing chips.

Pavilion of Dv series.

The first is the Pavilion Dv series with the design changing quite a bit but keeping the overall look of tradition with the slimmer machine forward. The overall design of the keyboard floats up just across the keys, the touchpad is slightly indented. Edges are also smooth. In addition, it also has a Beats Audio sound system.

The Pavilion Dv series will feature the latest Intel Core i processor and discrete graphics from Nvidia. Two large models will have HP CoolSense technology but not dv4. All three machines will start selling in June, the price of dv7 is from 800 USD, dv6 and dv4 is from 550 USD.

Pavilion m6.

Although HP does not use the Ultrabook phrase to classify Pavilion m6 models, it is obvious that this model appears to be competitive with a better price. It has a 15-inch screen and is as light as the latest Acer Timeline. It also uses aluminum-coated casing, Beats Audio, subwoofer and backlit keyboard. All are also equipped with the latest Intel Core i processor or AMD. However, no price has been disclosed.

Pavilion G series.

Finally, the G Series series with a modern design and not many designs to increase the minimalist for the machine. The machine will start selling from July 25 with a very attractive price from 450 USD (G6 model) and 500 USD for G7 model.

Official photo of the new HP Pavilion series

Official photos HP Pavilion G, DV and M6

Pavilion dv series.

Pavilion m6.

Pavilion g series.

You finished reading the article "HP launched the 2012 Pavilion Pavilion laptop series" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
