

Instagram allows two people with Live Stream

Instagram claims to be testing a new feature that allows users to play Live videos with friends.

Of course this is not a video stream with the person sitting next to you, but Instagram users can invite another person to join the video live on their own device.

When inviting someone to join, the screen will be divided into two, each on one half of the screen. Viewers can still comment, follow up as usual.

Live with your friends to play live video even if you don't sit side by side

What's more interesting is that you can delete or add any friend at any time during Live broadcast. It is unclear whether this means that interviews or programs can air on Instagram.

According to Instagram, this feature is being tested on some users and will be available in the next few months.
