

Instructions on how to create a Guest account on a Mac

When creating multiple accounts on a Mac, users can secure the data, preventing your data from being looked at by others when using the same computer. However, creating a Guest account on Mac OS X is not as simple and available as on Windows. So how to do it?

If computers are generally shared by many users, the best way to secure the data is to create different accounts. Creating guest accounts on Windows operating systems is quite simple and easy to implement.

Similarly, when we create a Guest account on OS X will also help ensure data security, preventing data from being grouped. Guest accounts on the Mac after use will be deleted with all data, settings and no access to the admin account data. However, with Mac OS X, setting up Guest accounts is not as simple as on a Windows computer, making it difficult for many people to use the same computer with others. In this article, we will show you the steps to create a Guest account on a Mac.

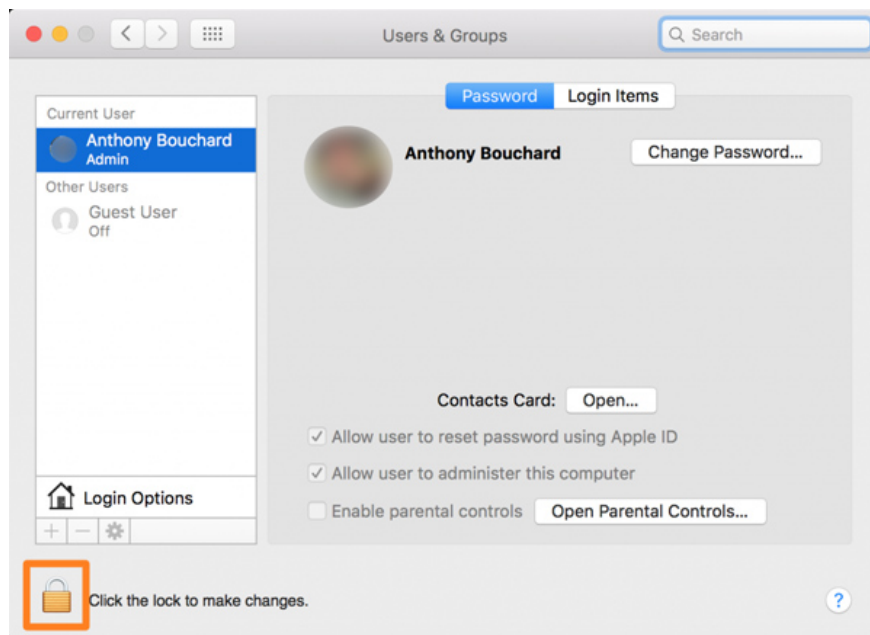

Step 1:

Access the System Preferences and open the User & Group section .

Step 2:

Next, we access the Password tab. Then click on the lock icon on the bottom left corner to unlock the change.

Step 3:

Next, we will login to the admin account and press Unlock .

Step 4:

As soon as you press Unlock, you will see the Guest User section is off if the user has never opened a Guest account on the machine ever.

Step 5:

You select Allow guests to log in to this computer and so we can create a Guest account.

Creating a Guest account on OS X will help us to secure the data, if there are many people who perform the operation on the same machine. You won't have to worry about your data being stolen, especially to prevent viruses from getting into your computer.
