

Instructions on how to unlock your Facebook account if you are blocked from liking and commenting.

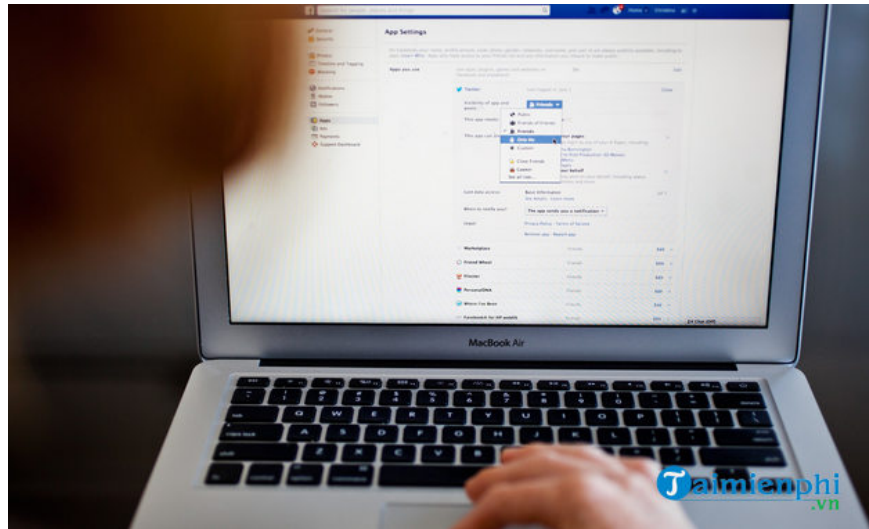

Recently, many people have encountered the problem of being blocked from liking and commenting on Facebook, causing inconvenience and affecting interaction. For example, you can't respond to comments from customers, family, or friends. To quickly resolve this, follow the instructions below from Taimienphi.

To prevent harassment and abuse, Facebook enforces policies that users must follow. Members who violate these policies may be blocked from certain features or have their accounts temporarily disabled.

Reasons why you are blocked from liking and commenting on Facebook.

Like other social networks, Facebook always strives to build a healthy environment for its users. Facebook has become a place for people to connect, share, and experience. Therefore, Facebook has established community standards, defining what behaviors are allowed and not allowed. If you are blocked from liking and commenting, you may have violated one of the following rules:

- Posting spam content.
- Sharing violent, inflammatory, or offensive content.
- Fraud, deception.
- Commenting on someone else's post and getting a complaint.
- Liking, sharing, or commenting too many times in a row or repeatedly.

If you're unable to like or comment on Facebook, your browser might be affecting how you interact with the platform. To check, open Facebook on a different browser. Make sure you're logged in with the correct account and try liking or commenting on a post. If it still doesn't work, try clearing your browser's cache, restarting it, updating to the latest version, and disabling any Facebook-related extensions. If the problem persists, continue with the steps below.
