

iOttie's fabric-wrapped power bank does Qi charging and USB-C for $35

Save $15 on a mobile charger that looks good and handles every kind of device.

Power banks are a dime a dozen, but most of them are boring black bricks missing one feature or another. The latest from iOttie, however, not only does all the things, but also looks nice doing them. Still, $50 struck me as a little pricey, so I asked the company to give Cheapskate readers a deal. Which it did: For a limited time, you can get the iOttie iON Wireless Go 10,000-mAh power bank for $34.95 with promo code iongo.

I love the design of this. Rounded and compact, it resembles a fabric-wrapped flask. That wrapping (available in Ash or Ruby) lends it the feel of an accoutrement, not a piece of tech.

The Wireless Go offers three modes of charging: Qi wireless (lay your phone or earbuds case on top), USB-C Power Delivery and USB Type-A. You can use all three simultaneously if necessary.

I particularly like the embedded numerical LED display, which lights up to show remaining battery life.

This isn't the least-expensive mobile charger I've seen, but it's one of the nicest-looking and most versatile. Could make a nice gift for Mom or a school graduate, if you're planning ahead a bit.

This article was published previously.

You finished reading the article "iOttie's fabric-wrapped power bank does Qi charging and USB-C for $35" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

