

Is Atlantis really a civilized country that was submerged 10,000 years ago, this could be some of the rest of this land.

Atlantis was first mentioned by the ancient Greek philosopher Plato over 2,300 years ago. According to Plato, the unthinkable island nation existed some 9,000 years before his time and mysteriously disappeared.

This lost city of Atlantis is perhaps one of the strangest archaeological discoveries of all time. The city is thought to be built by Poseidon. According to some researchers, a tsunami in the 10th century BC struck the city and sank the city of Atlantis into the sea. Although this is what the researchers say, so far archaeologists are still on their way to finding the truth.

The fertile and beautiful Atlantis city is a self-sustaining area and inhabited by gods and people. People here cultivate and raise animals themselves. They also built buildings from black and red rocks. Rare metals such as brass are made and used for entertainment and testing purposes.

According to many descriptions, this is a city that is thought to be the utopian era of mankind with abundant resources and wealth that may have existed more than 11,000 years ago. The city is ruled by a noble and powerful race, which has made a great impact on the islands of England and Africa.

Poseidon is one of the 12 gods who reigns on Mount Olympia in Greek Mythology, the ruler of the sea, and the "earth-shaking man", who controls earthquakes, caused by Poseidon's gods. . Poseidon is depicted as an elderly man with curly hair and a beard.

According to Greek documents, Atlantis was given to Poseidon when the gods began to divide the lands to rule. After some time, he fell in love with a mortal named Cleito and they gave birth to five twins, both sons. The first son was named Atlas and was inherited as the legitimate king to rule the whole island, while the remaining brothers were divided in part to rule.

After some time, a great war broke out between the Atlantis and the Athenians. They have lost control of the Atlantic and their control over Europe has been broken. The Athenians also liberated a number of occupied islands. But before the ensuing wars, the whole continent of Atlantis was sunk into the ocean floor. Atlantis, its people and even its memories were swallowed up by the ocean.

According to the description of the philosopher Plato (Greek philosopher), Atlantis is an island with many mountains in the north, down to the south is a large plain, the whole island is 555km long and 370km wide. The city of Atlantis is surrounded by 5 water rings and 5 ship tunnels. The large outer canal connects the water rings to the ocean. All roads to the city are protected by gates and towers. The surrounding wall was built of red, white and black stone and decorated with precious metal.

But in fact, except that Atlantis is mentioned in the works of the great philosopher Plato, we have not found any more records so far. Even the location of this island is still a mystery.

Archaeologists have also made assumptions as well as different proposals, but what is surprising is that many of the proposed locations are not located in the Atlantic.

Many proposed locations confirm certain characteristics related to the Atlantis story. Most of the proposed locations in history are those located in or near the Mediterranean . let's take a look at those supposedly most similar to Atlantis:

Azores

Plato quoted the Egyptian pastor as saying that they believed the Atlantis fought the ancient Mediterranean and then sank into 9,400 BC. Because Atlantis is thought to be a large island around the continent in the Atlantic, it is considered to be located in the Atlantic. Atlantis is believed to have invaded parts of the world and waged wars with Greece and the Eastern Mediterranean. Some believe that the Atlantis engulfment only took place on the main island with a few scattered islands still exist and one of them is the islands like the Azores.

Sahara Desert

The Sahara Desert, and more specifically southern Algeria, Tunisia, or both, Mount Ttionary and Ahagar have been proposed as the true locations of Atlantis. When the French invaded North Africa, they soon discovered a "lost world" in southern Algeria and the ancient port of Carthage was the epitome of the capital Atlantis described by the Egyptian priest.

Malta

Malta has huge ancient buildings dating back 9,000 years or more and orthodox archaeologists call this the site of the world's oldest stone buildings. Malta is still a rocky island now, but it once had elephants and even evidence that the land was destroyed by tsunamis and disasters. However, according to Plato's description, the island is too small to be Atlantis, but it shows the Mediterranean as a very different place 12,000 years ago.
