

Jewish philosophy of life: 'Giving away' is not simply a kind of happiness!

Jews have real life philosophies that make us worthy of admiration. The article below is a philosophy of life we ??deserve to learn

1. Why do Jews always answer this question with another question?
2. Learn how Jews teach children to communicate from a young age

The old people have the sentence: "Practicing good music" (the idea of ??doing good is the most joyful). Human hearts are indeed strange, when you work well, our hearts and minds are always happy and happy. But every time I do bad things I feel frightened, I end up not only conscience This seems to be a reminder to everyone that human life should work well.

Good work does not always need to be a conditional person to be able to work well, let go. But in fact it is just a not so important thing if you want to work well. Want to help others must come from the "Mind" of each person. Even if you don't have a lot of money, if you want to help people, it is perfectly possible to do things that are very non-materialistic.

Sometimes just a word of encouragement, a tight hug is also a good job to bring happiness to someone. Even those seemingly small gestures can sense a whole person.

In some parts of the world, giving away is not only voluntary but it is also an "underground principle" for most people.

The way to give away is to be Jewish happy

The way of giving to the happiness of Israelis is also special, they do not use any money to give to the poor but they use their own food to share and bring to happiness for everyone. Each season harvests nine crops here, instead of taking all the crops back, they leave a piece of fruit in the four corners of the field for those who pass them can enjoy.

In addition, they do this in a meaningful way, expressing gratitude for the gods who have given them good luck, helping them to escape the difficulties to have a peaceful and happy life. like today.

Every year, Jews celebrate Hanukkah festival (light festival) to remind them of affluence. On this occasion, they will stay with relatives and friends gathered around a station with many branches to plug candles every night. They just lit candles and prayed.

Jews always live in a sense of well-being that makes them feel like they are richer both physically and mentally. So, the younger generations here are always taught to receive this precious concept.

The affluent conception of the Jews is also expressed in commandments, loving others as love to yourself. That's because every Jew experiences suffering and slavery, at least his ancestors' ancestors went through. Without generosity from neighbors, strangers, and God, no one can survive.

Therefore, they always believe that giving away is simply a right and wise job that each of us should do in this life to always be happy. Happiness is not only about receiving but also the giving of each of us. Like the teaching of the famous Maimonides, the old man said: "No one is poor when doing charity."

You finished reading the article "Jewish philosophy of life: 'Giving away' is not simply a kind of happiness!" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.