

King Kong 6, a smartphone with a 10000mAh battery capacity but still lightweight

Hisense, recently introduced a new smartphone called King Kong 6 with a special feature of up to 10010mAh battery capacity but the machine is still thin and light.

Hisense, an electronics company from China recently introduced a new smartphone called King Kong 6 with a special feature of up to 10010mAh battery capacity but the machine is still thin and light.

To achieve this huge battery capacity, instead of integrating a 10000mAh battery into the body, Hisense has split the battery capacity into two, including a 5510mAh internal battery and a spare battery case. room with a capacity of 4500mAh. This fairly clever and novel approach has brought a total capacity of 10010mAh to the device. Thanks to the contact pins on the back, the battery cover will charge the battery in the machine easily.

This makes King Kong 6 only 9.47mm thick and weighs 205g, thin and light enough for users to easily carry daily.

Owning impressive battery life, but the configuration of Hisense King Kong 6 does not stand out. The device is equipped with 6.52 inch HD + screen, 4/6 / 8GB RAM options, 8MP selfie camera and 3 13MP + 2MP + 2MP camera clusters.

Hisense has not yet announced the price of King Kong 6.

Despite having a battery capacity of up to 10010mAh, Hisense King Kong 6 is not the smartphone with the largest battery today. Energizer Power Max P18K Pop with up to 18000mAh battery is now the owner of this title. Power Max P18K Pop has a thickness of up to 18mm, literally "bricks".

1. Motorola RAZR, flexible screen smartphone for the first time shows very impressive real photos
2. Galaxy Xcover FieldPro: Super durable smartphone for US agents only

You finished reading the article "King Kong 6, a smartphone with a 10000mAh battery capacity but still lightweight" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.