

Leaked information about iPhone 2020 with drastic improvements in visibility

Apple is expected to feature an iPad Pro-style ProMotion display on at least one iPhone version that will be available in 2020.

Although the 2019 iPhone models have just been launched not so long ago, rumors of iPhone 2020 have also started spreading on many technology forums and received great attention from the community.

According to some leaked information, Apple is expected to equip the iPad Pro-style ProMotion screen on at least one iPhone version that will be released in 2020. This will be a very valuable improvement because the new panel is said to bring a more vivid feel, and especially the ability to respond faster to the iPhone.

According to DigiTimes, iPhones equipped with iPad Pro-style ProMotion displays will have refresh rates between 90Hz and up to 120Hz, which is twice the current 60Hz.

However, instead of using LCD panels like iPad Pro, the iPhone 2020 ProMotion version will be equipped with OLED panels Apple, similar to the newly launched iPhone 11 Pro and iPhone 11 Pro Max.

ProMotion is a technology that helps the monitor automatically adjust the refresh rate based on the user's specific action in real time, thereby ensuring the best possible feedback performance. In addition, ProMotion also helps to increase refresh rate on specific areas of the screen instead of the entire screen. Therefore, when you surf the web, play 3D games or draw with Apple Pencil on iPad Pro, that area of the screen will have a higher refresh rate, which feels smoother, faster, and significantly more accurate.

For now, it's still unclear what the true benefit iPhone users will get from a 120Hz screen if this device is not equipped with Apple Pencil compatibility. Not only that, increasing the refresh rate will definitely make the screen 'consume' more battery and system resources.

Major Android smartphone manufacturers around the world have begun to launch smartphones with 90Hz screens, typically the flagship Google Pixel 4. Therefore, Apple equipped with ProMotion panels on The iPhone is a logical step, helping Apple with a significant competitive advantage in the market.
