

Legendary League mobile version will be released in 2020

League of Legends - one of the most popular MOBA games today will soon have a mobile version for Android and iOS users.

League of Legends - one of the most popular MOBA games today will soon have a mobile version for Android and iOS users.

According to reports by Reuters, Riot Games and Tencent are working together to develop a mobile version of League of Legends to help this game come and more easily accessible to users in Asia. In China, game revenue comes from mobile games reaching 57%, while that figure in the US is only 36%.

In addition, the League of Legends with mobile version will also help Riot Games organize many international-scale competitions more easily.

To be able to focus on organizing tournaments, managing young talents, building e-sports competitions and selling League of Legends related products in China, early January through Tencent and Riot Games established a new investment fund called Tengjing Sports.

As expected, by 2020 iOS and Android users will experience this version.

A few years ago, Tencent once suggested Riot Games about developing a mobile version of the League of Legends game but was rejected. In 2015, Riot Games unveiled its own mobile MOBA game called Honor of King and made a big hit in China. But when it debuted in Western countries with the new name of the Arena of Valor, this game was not impressive.

You finished reading the article "Legendary League mobile version will be released in 2020" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.