Google Meet is available on the web and phones and tablets for Android and iOS.

Google Meet is primarily designed as a way of organizing video meetings. However, you can turn on the camera and microphone independently, so you can also use the app for audio calls if you want.

You can make a call and invite your friends or family members to join. They can join by entering the meeting code provided by you, or you can send them a link to click on.

One of the best things about Google Meet is that you don't need to install any software on your computer. Everyone on the call (organizer and attendees) just need to use a modern web browser.

What are the best features of Google Meet?

With the free plan, Google Meet supports meetings up to 1 hour, although this has been extended to 24 hours until September 30, 2020.

You can create and join as many meetings as you like, so there's nothing stopping you from holding a second meeting if you reach the specified time limit.

Up to 100 people can join in the same meeting. As the meeting organizer, you can mute others, which is what you need to do for a large meeting.

Google Meet does its best to filter out any noise that isn't speech. It also features live subtitles, which automatically annotate what people say (relatively reliable and great).

You can also share your screen with everyone during the call. This can be a specific window or the entire screen, and it works on mobile as well.

Finally, Google claims that "online meetings are encrypted when transmitted" and "safeguards are constantly being updated to increase protection". The users are companies with enterprise-grade security, but for the casual user, the privacy setting is fine.

How much does Google Meet cost?

Google Meet is free for everyone to make and join calls. All you need is a Google account (you already have it if you're using Gmail), but it's also free.

However, some Google Meet features are only available through a paid G Suite subscription. This cost is $ 10 / active user / month. G Suite is targeted at business users and is Google's suite of productivity and collaboration apps.

Some of the additional features that G Suite offers to Google Meet are:

1. Meeting time 300 hours
2. 250 people joined the meeting
3. International or US dialing phone numbers
4. The meeting record is saved to Google Drive
5. 24/7 online support
