

MacBook Pro Retina offers discounts that are still heavily stocked

According to DigiTimes, parts suppliers in Asia have not yet received additional parts orders for the MacBook Pro Retina, proving that the Apple warehouse is still full.

According to DigiTimes, parts suppliers in Asia have not yet received additional parts orders for the MacBook Pro Retina, proving that the Apple warehouse is still full .

This information is not unexpected for many people. In October 2012, the 13-inch MacBook Pro Retina debuted for $ 1,700. In February 2013, Apple was forced to cut prices to $ 1,500 after a series of US retailers like Best Buy and MacMall launched their own discounts. The MacConnection store even has a time to lower the price of the 13-inch MacBook Pro to $ 1300.

The current price of Macbook Pro Retina is still too high to attract users, even though most users crave this laptop. Last year, the MacBook Pro production also encountered some problems, not only that, but the MacBook also faced strong competition from another Apple product, iPad.

According to DigiTimes , it is likely that by the end of the second quarter of this year, Apple will release the next generation of MacBooks.

You finished reading the article "MacBook Pro Retina offers discounts that are still heavily stocked" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

