

Microsoft Edge may rise to second place, behind Google Chrome

As expected, the Chromium Edge browser will be released on Windows 10, Windows 7, 8 and macOS on January 15.

As expected, the Chromium Edge browser will be released on Windows 10, Windows 7, 8 and macOS on January 15. Microsoft expects this new browser to surpass other competitors in the browser market such as Google Chrome or Mozilla Firefox.

Comparing current market share, this goal of Microsoft may not seem realistic but with the strong growth of Microsoft Edge recently, it promises a bright future.

In December 2019, NetMarketShare published the latest data about the browser market. Specifically, the market leading browser is still Google Chrome with 65.5% market share, Firefox with 8.2% in second place. Microsoft Edge closely follows with 6.4%.

Browser Version	Share
Chrome	66.59%
Firefox	8.22%
Edge	6.47%
Internet Explorer 11	5.77%
Safari	5.63%
Sogou Explorer	1.82%
QQ	1.79%
Opera	1.31%
Yandex	0.80%

Just a few months ago, Microsoft Edge accounted for just over 4% of the market share. But thanks to the effects of the Chromium-powered Microsoft Edge version, the browser market share has grown significantly, even surpassing Internet Explorer.

In the next few months, the market share of Microsoft Edge is expected to grow strongly from devices with Windows 10, Windows 7, 8 and macOS.

The Chromium Edge version is expected to be released through Windows Update to replace the current Edge, allowing users to experience the same exciting features as on Chrome right on Microsoft Edge.

Let's wait and see how Chromium Edge will put pressure on other browsers in the near future.

1. Please download the all-new Microsoft Edge stable version of Chromium 78 from the official Microsoft website
2. Users cannot uninstall Edge browser on Windows 10

You finished reading the article "Microsoft Edge may rise to second place, behind Google Chrome" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.