

Microsoft is about to allow users to hide date and time information on the Windows 11 taskbar

The date and time display item located on the right side of the Windows taskbar is a long-standing utility and extremely useful for many people.

However, some individuals love the simplicity of the interface, or even obsess over time, or for other reasons, such as taking screenshots without having to worry about the date and time displayed. display, you may want to hide the date and time information on the taskbar. Previously, this wish was impossible, but now it is different. Windows 11 will allow users to hide time information from the taskbar.

In fact, the feature to hide the date and time on the taskbar first appeared about a month ago, but is only available to test users of the Windows Insiders program. However, up to now, on the Build 2023 event stage, Microsoft has announced exactly this option as part of a series of changes that are about to be implemented on Windows 11. Via a handy option located in the section By setting the date and time in Windows Settings, users will be able to hide date and time information from the taskbar, leaving a cleaner and more minimalistic looking taskbar interface.

Picture 1 of Microsoft is about to allow users to hide date and time information on the Windows 11 taskbar

Microsoft has not announced a specific time this feature will be rolled out, but everything seems to be ready and it is only a matter of time.

The taskbar (taskbar) is the most frequently interacted area on Windows in general. Therefore, new changes here can have a big impact on the overall experience of the operating system. Optimizing the taskbar is also one of Microsoft's top focuses on Windows 11.

You finished reading the article "Microsoft is about to allow users to hide date and time information on the Windows 11 taskbar" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.