In June, Microsoft officially launched a completely new Skype video chat application for iPhone users, designed with a completely Windows-style interface.

But since Apple released a large iPhone duo iPhone 6 and iPhone 6 Plus, while the Skype application continues to run the old interface on both of Apple's new smartphones it seems like the user interface is not still fit. This makes users feel very uncomfortable.

But there is good news for users who are using one of Apple's latest iPhones, Microsoft is about to release a new version of the Skype application with special enhancements to better fit the device. suffer from this.

Skype 5.6 for iPhone now has a smaller user interface and is optimized for new handsets with larger sizes, of course the application will continue to work well on sized devices. screen as small as 4 inches or even 3.5 inches. Microsoft said on iPhone 6 and iPhone 6 Plus, the Skype application is now able to " show details of your recent conversations and display messages in conversations ".

As with previous versions of Skype, the latest update of the app also includes features to work with new extensions on iOS 8.

This is the second time this week that Microsoft has released new versions of the app, earlier this week it also launched the Qik Skype application, an instant short video messaging application for Android, iOS and Windows Phone users .
