

Microsoft provides free Windows copyrights

In the presentation last night, Microsoft announced that it will provide free Windows / Windows Phone licenses for phones and tablets with smaller screens 9.

In the presentation last night, Microsoft announced that it will provide free Windows / Windows Phone licenses for phones and tablets with screens smaller than 9 inches.

This is the company's latest move in an effort to bring its devices to more people at a lower price after Microsoft lowered Windows 8.1 hardware requirements. Providing free Windows will definitely be welcomed by PC makers because they can reduce the cost of making cheap tablet models (screens are about 7 inches to 8 inches), thereby reducing costs. product. The Windows Phone market is similar, phones running this operating system will become cheaper, especially low-end devices, leveraging Microsoft to increase market share for its mobile platform.

And it's not just mobile devices that use Windows for free, but so do Internet of Things . The special Windows version for these networked home appliances is unknown when it will be released, but providing a Windows license for $ 0 will help promote this category of products.

You finished reading the article "Microsoft provides free Windows copyrights" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.