

Microsoft released an 11-minute video revealing about Windows 11

Recently, Microsoft released an 11-minute video to promote the upcoming version of Windows 11 (or another name for the next version of Windows).

This video includes an 11-minute collection of startup sounds from different versions of Windows, all of which are slowed down by 4,000 percent compared to the original sound.

Picture 1 of Microsoft released an 11-minute video revealing about Windows 11

In its YouTube caption, Microsoft says this is a relaxing video for users who are too excited before the upcoming Windows event on June 24. The software giant hopes, a journey 'slow down' with the startup sound of Windows 95, XP and 7 will help them feel more comfortable and relaxed.

This move by Microsoft is their way of bringing attention to the next version of Windows that has been announced by Microsoft executives in recent months.

In the upcoming Windows event on June 24, users hope Microsoft will announce a new version of Windows with a more modern and beautiful changed interface.

A few other hints from Microsoft suggest that the next version of Windows could be Windows 11, which is an event that will take place at exactly 11 a.m. ET, and the invitation to attend also has Windows windows that cast shadows. very similar to number 11.

Let's wait until June 24 to get answers about Microsoft's next version of Windows.

You finished reading the article "Microsoft released an 11-minute video revealing about Windows 11" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.