

Microsoft releases the native Copilot app for Windows 11 with a host of useful new features.

Microsoft has issued a statement confirming the complete removal of 'all traces' of the 'suspicious' Copilot application that some users found had been secretly installed on their systems.

A few months ago, Microsoft released preliminary information about a new "native" Copilot application for Windows. However, the excitement quickly faded when users discovered that the program was still just a web application.

Now, Microsoft has finally listened to its users with the official release of the truly 'native' Copilot application, built using XAML specifically for Windows 11. Furthermore, the latest update makes this application even more useful for less experienced users who want to know how to adjust specific settings on their computer in the simplest way possible.

Here is the official announcement from Microsoft:

1. Native XAML application and new user interface : Includes a new sidebar where you can easily start a new chat and view your chat history.
2. Ask questions about your computer: For example, "How do I set up Bluetooth headphones on this device?" and Copilot will provide information appropriate to your current version of Windows.

As of now, the updated Copilot application (version 1.25023.101.0) is being rolled out early to Insider testers across all channels. Note that the update is being released gradually, so you may not receive it immediately. However, you can try installing the update on your computer even if you are not in the Insider program. Here's how:

1. Go to store.rg-adguard.net and select "Product ID" from the first dropdown list.
2. Paste 9NHT9RB2F4HD into the search bar and select "Fast" from the second dropdown list.
3. Click the checkmark button to find available packages.
4. Find Microsoft.Copilot_1.25023.106.0_neutral~_8wekyb3d8bbwe.appxbundle and click to download.
5. Open the file and click "Update" when prompted.
6. Run the updated Copilot application.
