

Microsoft removed 1500 junk apps on the Windows Store

Microsoft has bluntly removed junk, fake or deceptive apps, misleading users from their Windows Store.

Microsoft has "bluntly" removed junk, fake or deceptive applications, misleading users from their Windows Store.

After admitting that Windows Store has many applications that deceive users as we reported earlier, Microsoft has started to "purify" its products by removing more than 1500 garbage applications, and said it will. Refunds for those who "accidentally" bought wrongly.

In addition, Microsoft has just issued a new policy for developers to put applications on the Windows Store including:

1. Name: Must be clear, accurate, properly describe the functions of the application.
1. Category: Must have a reasonable and functional list, purpose of use to help users find easily.
1. Icon: must be specific and not be confused with other application icons.

This new policy will apply to both Windows Store and Windows Phone Store.

You finished reading the article "Microsoft removed 1500 junk apps on the Windows Store" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.