

Microsoft re-released the Outlook 2007 update

Nearly a month after removing the Outlook 2007 update due to connectivity and performance issues, Microsoft has released a patch to correct its mistake in December 2010.

Nearly a month after removing the Outlook 2007 update due to connectivity and performance issues, Microsoft has released a patch to correct its mistake in December 2010.

>>>Microsoft just released had to remove the Outlook 2007 update

On Tuesday, January 11, 2011, Microsoft re-released the Outlook 2007 update, saying it has solved problems with connecting to mail servers, slow folders and automatic storage - Problems. The problem has emerged almost immediately after the initial fix was provided to users on December 14, 2010.

Just two days later, Microsoft removed this update from their Windows Update patch service and apologized for the mistake.

In an article posted on Office's blog, Microsoft advised users to download the redeemed update via Windows Update, or by manually downloading a new version from the Microsoft website.

Some users said that the new patch solved their problems.

You finished reading the article "Microsoft re-released the Outlook 2007 update" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.

