As stated, Minecraft Earth is an AR game, so some real world-related elements will be added to the game, similar to the popular Pokémon Go game. However, instead of Pokémon appearing in real life via a smartphone screen, for Minecraft Earth, you will admire the works built by yourself and other players. In other words, you will still work with familiar building tools like on the traditional Minecraft version, but instead of being built in the game's space, these buildings will appear in the real world. via smartphones and enhanced virtual reality technology (AR), promises a very interesting experience.

Adventures in 'virtual but real' world in Minecraft Earth

One of the most interesting aspects of adventures in Minecraft Earth is that your position in 3D space will be closely related to the game. That means that if you see some underground chests, you'll also have to go downstairs, or into a real-world cave to reach that chest.

It is not clear when the official release date of Minecraft Earth will be released, but with the release of the beta on Android this time, you probably won't have to wait any longer!
