

Minecraft: Top 4 best animal mobs to accompany gamers

Minecraft is a relatively dangerous world and an animal companion will bring a lot of benefits to the player.

Parrot

Although not very useful in terms of combat, parrots can mimic the sounds of surrounding mobs in Minecraft. So, in case the player is tailed by a hostile mob or if there is a random mob in the area, the audio signal from the parrot acts as a kind of safety warning.

After being tamed by feeding wheat, melons, beets or pumpkin seeds, parrots will follow the player and always find their way back. They can even perch on the player's shoulder to look around.

fox

If you are looking for a useful mob to pick up loose items, then a baby fox is an extremely suitable choice. After breeding two foxes using sweet berries or glowing berries, they will spawn a fox cub that will bond with the gamer.

Once evolved into an adult fox, it will help the player pick up items scattered on the ground. In some cases, foxes can even pick up items such as weapons and use them in battle.

Cat/Burning Cat

One of the most useful types of pets that you should own in Minecraft are cats and broaches. They can be quickly tamed by feeding them raw cod or salmon.

After being tamed, they will follow and always accompany gamers. When the player sleeps on the bed at night, the cat can bring gifts such as rabbit feet, strings or even ghost membranes. In addition, they also have the effect of repelling creepers. Because creepers in general are very afraid of cats and will run away until they reach a distance of 6 to 16 blocks each time they encounter.

Wolves have always been a great help for gamers in the Minecraft world. After eating some bones, they will get a necklace and be tamed.

Unless ordered to sit down, wolves will always follow the player and attack any hostile mobs that come close. There is no limit to the number of wolves you can tame, so you can completely build a pack of wolves to keep yourself safe.
