

Motorola appointed Rick Osterloh as the new CEO

Motorola has announced the appointment of Rick Osterloh as the new CEO and president of the company in place of former CEO Dennis Woodside, who left the position in September 2013 to become CEO of Dropbox.

Motorola has announced the appointment of Rick Osterloh as the new CEO and president of the company in place of former CEO Dennis Woodside, who left the position in September 2013 to become CEO of Dropbox.

Rick Osterloh is not a stranger to Motorola and Silicon Valley, he joined Motorola seven years ago after Motorola acquired Good and joined the company's development of Android devices. During that time he also participated in the Skype development project as a design and product supervisor before it was acquired by Microsoft.

Rick Osterloh will take over the work from Jonathan Rosenberg , who has been Motorola's temporary CEO.

Acquired by Lenovo, Motorola has a long way to go, although in the past they have achieved some success from rare products like the Moto G. Motorola's success is primarily in town. European school, especially in the UK with 6% mobile phone market share.

With the appointment of Rick Osterloh and good signals from the production of the Moto 360 smart watch later this year, Motorola is hoping to revive the loss-making business situation over the years, especially with support. strong Lenovo.

You finished reading the article "Motorola appointed Rick Osterloh as the new CEO" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.
