

Motorola is the first phone company to sell a phone repair kit

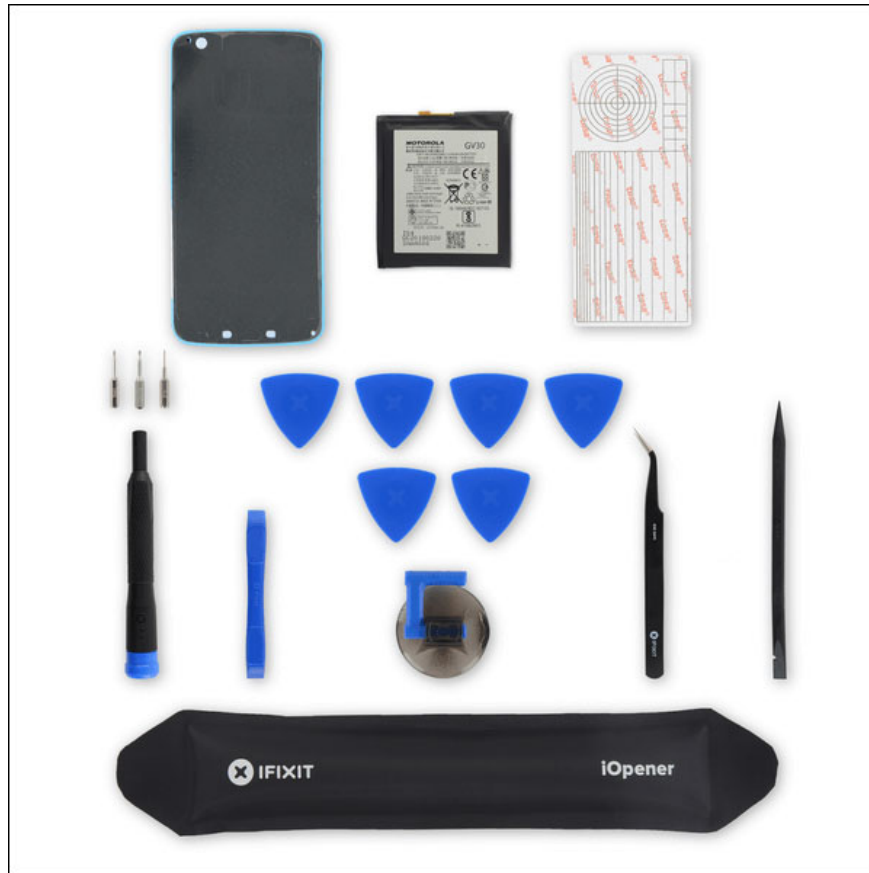

Users can repair themselves to a certain extent.

The repair of electronic devices is rare when it is easy. Recently, Motorola has partnered with iFixit to bring the toolkit so that users can replace the battery or screen easily.

Repairing electronic devices is becoming more and more difficult as smaller components and manufacturers also make them more difficult to open. Motorola became the first phone manufacturer to offer a set of products for users to fix their phones themselves.

Together with partner iFixit, Motorola launched tools to install screens, replace batteries like tongs, tweezers, suction tools . to easily open Motorola phones.

While e-waste is still an unsolved problem, it is important to extend the life of these devices. Other manufacturers, most notably Apple, have completely turned their backs on, not giving customers a chance to fix their own devices but have to pay to use their services. In fact, they didn't fix anything but completely replaced the circuit board and made more electronic waste.

Motorola phone repair kit

Replacing the battery for Moto phones will cost about $ 39.99, including the necessary tools. Screen replacement for inexpensive models like Moto G4, G5 or Z will be $ 99.99, with Moto Z Force Droid or Droid Turbo 2 will be $ 199.99, including the kit.

See more:

1. Motorola made a serious mistake when shaking hands with Steve Jobs
2. Instructions for replacing a broken laptop screen
3. Apple Vietnam lowered the price of the service to replace the old iPhone battery with sudden battery shutdown

You finished reading the article "Motorola is the first phone company to sell a phone repair kit" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.