

Mysterious island inhabited by the 'stranger-eating' tribe in the Indian Ocean

This mysterious island is owned by the Indian government, however, setting foot on the island is strictly prohibited. The consequence of this is not only the punishment of the law and also the terrible thing that many people fear.

North Sentinel Island, an island of poetic beauty, wilderness, and home to the world's most mysterious tribe. This mysterious island is owned by the Indian government, however, setting foot on the island is strictly prohibited. The consequence of this is not only the punishment of the law and also the terrible thing that many people fear.

1. Scary hair with the scary carnivorous tribes in the world
2. Unexplainable mystery about the legendary "ghost island" in the middle of the Atlantic Ocean

3 miles around this unspoiled 72km² wide island are prohibited from arriving. The purpose of this is not only to protect the indigenous people here but also to protect the tourists themselves from the aboriginal attack.

Residents living on the island do not welcome anyone, they live in dense forests. In fact, scientists are completely ignorant of them. Because anyone who wants to approach the island will face a series of arrows facing them, they are ready to kill strangers who invade the island.

In the 19th century, some boats passed by the island were smashed by waves. The island's aborigines attacked the sailors with bows as they tried to swim to the beach.

In 1897, when searching for an escaped prisoner, a group of police arrived in the island. They were extremely frightened and had to flee immediately when they saw the prisoner in the forest with his neck cut and the dagger full of arrows.

In 2006, two shipwrecked fishermen flocked to the island, they were also killed by indigenous people.

Even scientists do not know how many people this mysterious tribe has. They can only estimate numbers ranging from a few tens to several hundred people.

A rare image of the people of the North Sentinel.

According to archaeologists, this mysterious tribe appeared at the North Sentinel island for at least 60,000 years. They created a population completely separate from the outside world for too long - at least 10,000 years. So the island exploration also brought some dangers for the indigenous people on the island.

These aborigines do not have an immune system to external diseases, even the most common diseases like colds can rob the lives of all the islanders.

The Indian government has tried to reach the island for a long time, but the islanders' reaction has made them give up.

You finished reading the article "Mysterious island inhabited by the 'stranger-eating' tribe in the Indian Ocean" edited by the TipsMake team. We hope this article has provided you with many useful tech tips and tricks. You can search for similar articles on tips and guides. Thank you for reading and for following us regularly.