You've probably heard about Facebook testing a new interface on the Android version before, with many similarities on iOS. Although it is still in beta phase, at the moment, Facebook has allowed more people to access and try this new version.

You've probably heard about Facebook testing a new interface on the Android version before, with many similarities on iOS. Although it is still in beta phase, at the moment, Facebook has allowed more people to access and try this new version.

The new interface is different from the old layout and more like on iOS, the items are divided into 4 separate tabs, you can drag your hand left or right to switch between tabs.

The current version I use is 8.x, but not everyone who uses this new version has a new interface, depending on whether Facebook is enabled or not. The new interface as well as changed user operations help you use facebook faster and browse content more conveniently. Every time you browse for a notification, you can return to the previous location on the bulletin, not reloading the bulletin board as before.

Facebook on Android has one more point that I do not see on iOS version that is the section Friends - Close Friend . Most likely you will be updated this interface soon, in the meantime, try participating in Facebook testing to see if it will be updated soon.
