Opera Max is a free and very easy-to-use application with most data compression functions of Android phone applications, now officially available in Vietnam and more than 20 other countries.

Download Opera Max for Android

According to the vendor's statement, this unique application allows users to use up to 50% more than regular data packets. In addition, not only does it support Android versions from 4.0 and above, but Opera Max is now available on Android Lollipop devices.

Opera Max works by compressing data for most applications, including videos, text and images on Android devices, which also means users will be able to use more data in one package. According to Opera, this is the only application on Android that can help users compress video-formatted data on the phone, which consumes most of the user's data usage. By enabling Opera Max, users will be less "buffering" when watching videos online.

Opera Max's new video optimization feature is developed by Rocket Optimizer, a cloud-based solution that works on Opera's Skyfire platform. When installed, Opera Max starts routing network traffic data on the mobile device and transmits it to Opera's server, using a virtual private network (VPN). All requests for unencrypted data (including web security and applications with HTTPS connections) are sent via Opera's servers, and compressed data such as videos, images and websites will consume data. less than.

The application also provides data tracking charts, which help users instantly see where their data has gone and control data consumption. They can also track the amount of data saved, or even lock applications that consume too much mobile data and are only activated when Wi-Fi is available.
