

Painter showed off painting with the top paint like Photoshop, who thought the people would show off 'good' equally

Espen Olsen Sætervik, a well-known Norwegian artist recently surprised many of his talents when posting his complete picture of Paint on his personal Facebook page.

Espen Olsen Sætervik, a famous artist from Norway recently surprised many of his talents when posting his complete picture of Paint on a personal Facebook page with a funny caption. : "Just tried a bit with the brush in Paint, but I'll still be loyal to Photoshop later ."

To demonstrate that the painting is a work made by Paint, not a color game from another integrated application, Sætervik took a picture of the entire screen of the working screen. Immediately, his post received 12,000 Likes and tens of thousands of Share.

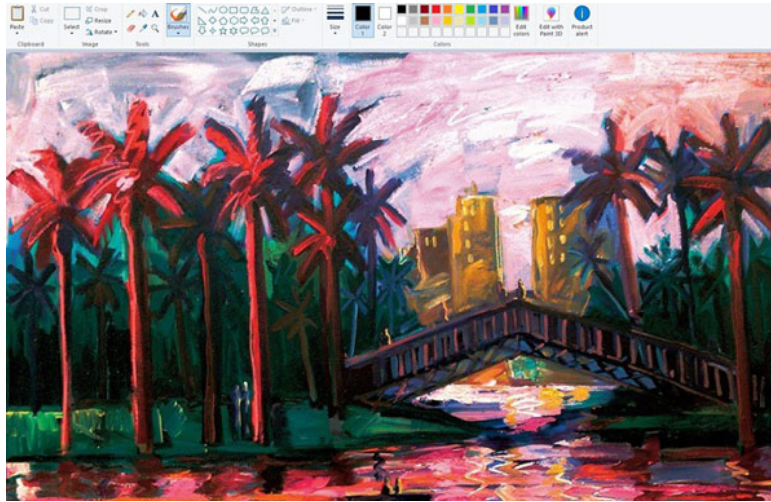

Espen Olsen S Painttervik's Paint painting with the painting features "Paint".

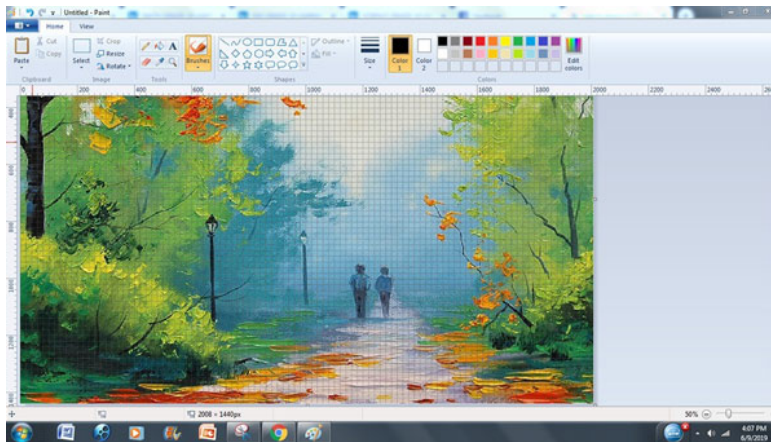

Paint is an application, software that supports drawing and creation but is not appreciated by users in Photoshop, Illustrator, professional applications to create and paint today.

With his talent, Sætervik still produces a harmonious picture, beautiful and full of details despite using a support software that lacks many functions.

However, what makes many people even Sætervik unexpectedly intertwined with admiring comments of netizens is the real and not inferior works of the Sætervik painting. The authors of those Paint paintings have people who simply paint for fun but also those who work in the field of design creativity.

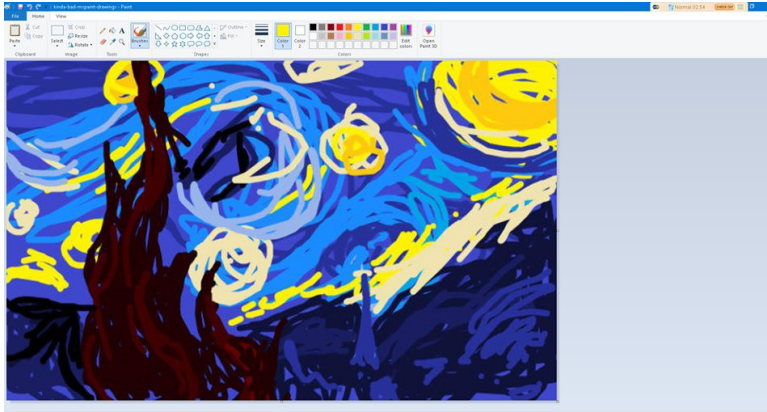

Looks like oil painting too?

A picture like this that the owner only received as "drawing" .

Despite great efforts to imitate Sætervik's picture, the result is only like this.

Young man copy Van Gogh's The Starry Night.

A guy also pulled out a picture of an unofficial 5th grade elementary school student to show off.
