

PhoneKid, what's the special phone for children?

A Spanish company called Escudo Web has developed a smartphone for children.

If you're afraid your child is addicted to smartphones or think they're addicted to this device, this may be good news. Escudo Web, a Spanish-based company, has developed a smartphone for children.

Called PhoneKid, this mobile device allows parents to control the phone via an application. Therefore, parents can do things like decide on the application their child accesses (by turning on different modes) and even blocking and replacing the main screen on the child's phone with the command integrated. available.

In addition, the phone also has other features such as the device is never turned off and location positioning is the same. The phone has a SoS button, silently calling parents - very useful in emergency situations when children are in distress.

PhoneKid runs on a special Android version, and the company is currently looking for a hardware partner - according to reports, this phone is not easy for children to overcome the protection and control from parents. .
